

Mini Tennis Green Report

Ben Arnold

Behaviour in lessons:

Ben is a very well behaved member of the group. He really tries hard in the sessions, listens well to advice and is keen to develop his game as he engages regularly in discussions. Ben has a clear passion for the sport and this is really great to see.

Areas of strength:

Ben demonstrates good technique on both the forehand and backhand side of the game, which is very promising with regards to match play. Ben also shows a good level of depth and control in his game, using his power advantage to full use, depth being an effective weapon in his game to create space and freedom for himself in the point.

Areas to improve:

Ben needs to make sure he maintains his current level of progress with the determination he has demonstrated so far. He also needs to improve his sense of how deep the ball is coming at him as well as the depth of the ball he is sending, and move to it accordingly.

Ready for competitions?

If Ben keeps to his current level of progress, he could potentially play at other clubs in mini tennis tournaments this summer, but in the meantime, match practice in the form of green competitions held at Crowborough would be advisable to give Ben greater experience at playing in matches.
